certification services. The AIAG standard was developed by a Technical Committee on "Nondestructive Testing and Predictive Certification Services". The standard was originally published in 1975, and revised in 1983, 1988, and 1990. It is still valid as of 2011. Contents The standard includes: CQA Specification and explanation of contents AIAG CQA Approval Acronyms and abbreviation Definitions General recommendations CQA means "certified quality assurance" and indicates that the test results have been reviewed by qualified personnel and tested using appropriate instrumentation. The standard provides requirements for testing the NDT personnel to verify that they possess the appropriate knowledge and skills in accordance with ISO 9001 and/or ISO 9001-2000. The standard defines a third-party certification system called "Predictive Certification" that uses an NDT (or other) service provider to evaluate a client's or user's (or, occasionally, an NDT provider's) knowledge, skills, and other attributes. This predictive certification process may be used to validate whether a person is qualified to perform a specific test, or to recognize an individual's prior education, training, or experience. Predictive certification may be used by the user of an NDT service provider to certify that the NDT provider's personnel have the knowledge and skills to perform various types of NDT services. The standard is an outline for a process which is documented to include a requirements analysis, qualification testing, review, and certification. AIAG's goal for this process is to ensure that the NDT professional staff possesses the knowledge and skill required to perform the test procedures in an acceptable manner. Methods of verifying the competency of personnel are varied and may include direct examination, observation, or educational or experiential achievement and verification. If that happened to me, I would be heartbroken. I have had countless conversations with folks who haven't been around Florida State but have heard the phrase: "He is too nice to be a coach." It was once a phrase that was used to discredit the coach. It was 82157476af
